

Joshua D. Nadreau is a labor and employment litigation partner in the Boston office of the management side labor law firm of Fisher and Phillips. Mr. Nadreau, a graduate of Northeastern University Law School, routinely advises and represents clients from Fortune 500 corporations to locally owned car dealerships and other businesses, in on all aspects of labor and employment law including collective bargaining, arbitration proceedings, and before state and federal administrative agencies. With an undergraduate degree in sports management, Mr. Nadreau has maintained a keen interest in the intersection of labor and sports. He has lectured and written extensively for the ABA, The National Center on the Study of Collective Bargaining in Higher Education and numerous legal journals on developing issues related to the status of student athletes. He was among the litigation team representing UCLA, the PAC-12 Conference and the NCAA in a now resolved charge brought before the NLRB by the National College Players Association. In his spare time Mr. Nadreau is a certified high school football and basketball official and proud father of Watson the Beagle.