PLENARY SESSION

The College Athlete and the Winds of Change

Since its creation more than a century ago, the NCAA has prohibited collegiate athletes from receiving compensation for their participation in collegiate athletics. Until 2021, “student athletes” were also not permitted to monetize any aspect of their name, image or likeness, yet billions in profits have resulted from the athletic prowess of unpaid college athletes. Now, the question of whether certain college athletes should be treated as employees has once again been placed front and center both by the United States Supreme Court with its decision in NCAA vs. Alston and the prosecutorial perspective of the general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board. What does this mean for college athletics going forward? Are student athletes employees? Would defining college athletes as employees wreak havoc on the infrastructure of a university's educational system and resources? How might the field of arbitration be impacted? To discuss these momentous issues is a distinguished panel.

CONCURRENT SESSION

Generative A.I. and Labor Arbitration – As the Case Develops, at the Hearing, and on the Arbitrator's Desk

Technology has changed the world of work many times over. Artificial intelligence – especially generative A.I. like ChatGPT – feels different. These developing technologies not only impact labor and management in the workplace but have the potential to alter the process of labor arbitration itself, both in the hearing room and at the arbitrator's desk. Please join our panel of academics, arbitrators, and labor and management practitioners as we frame and discuss these cutting-edge issues, from substantive disputes under collective bargaining agreements to advocates' use of A.I. at and after the hearing to whether and how generative A.I. may be relevant to an arbitrator's practice. The goal is for attendees to leave the session with more understanding about generative A.I., and be prepared to address these issues in arbitration. (Program description is 100% human generated.)

DISTINGUISHED SPEAKER LUNCHEON

In Retrospect - Northern Ireland, Baseball, and the Art of Negotiations

Senator Mitchell, former federal judge, Senate Majority Leader, and special international peace envoy during three Presidential Administrations, speaks to us about his experiences negotiating with parties during turbulent times. He reflects on what did and did not work. He shines a light on his work as the lead factfinder during the American baseball epidemic of steroid use and how the parties finally came together to attempt to resolve the problems. As a master mediator, Senator Mitchell passes on his message about his essential strategy for finding resolution between parties in dispute. The Academy gratefully acknowledges the support of the College of Labor and Employment Lawyers, and the NAA Research and Education Foundation in making this interview and recording possible.

Introduction:

William McKee, NAA President, Denton, TX

Speaker:

George Mitchell, Former Senator and Senate Majority Leader, ME

CONCURRENT SESSION

Recurring Issues in Postal Arbitration

Representatives of management and four postal unions will address issues, both new and old, that frequently arise in arbitrations between the unions and the Postal Service. Some perennial concerns are ex parte communications, what is included in the record at arbitration, what the parties expect of arbitrators, and problems that arise when arbitrators don't "stick to the basics".

Moderator:

Eileen A. Cenci, NAA, Hyannis, MA

Speakers:

Jennifer Breslin, Director, Collective Bargaining & Arbitration, United States Postal Service, Washington, D.C.

Charlie Cash, Industrial Relations Director, American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO, Washington, D.C.

CONCURRENT SESSION

Let's Learn from Each Other – Arbitration Practices in the U.S. and Canada

This session will explore differences in the arbitration hearing process between the U.S. and Canada – pre-hearing, hearing and post-hearing differences. There are many similarities during actual hearing, but some key differences as well. Based on an actual case, counsel from both countries will explore how it would be litigated in each country and debate the pros and cons of the differences. This session poses the question: can we learn from each other?

Moderator:

PLENARY SESSION

Guns at Work

Gun violence is at record levels in the United States. No location is immune from tragedy, including the workplace. What role does arbitration play in regulating guns at work? In this program, labor and management advocates and a panel of arbitrators will consider The Case of the Hidden Handgun. At issue is the dismissal of an employee who was fired after a gun was found in his locker, contrary to a work rule prohibiting weapons on company property. Should the union's grievance challenging the dismissal be sustained? A documentary Appendix will assist in drawing lessons from the program.

Can Employees Say That??

This session examines ways in which social media (interactive technologies that facilitate the creation and sharing of information, ideas, interests, and other forms of expression through virtual communities and networks such as Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, WhatsApp, email) can impact employment matters in the U.S. and Canada. The presenters address the use of social media as part of a disciplinary investigation, related constitutional issues, and limitations on employers and employees. The presenters also examine social media policies and how they are designed to provide guidelines and requirements for your organization's social media use as well as how employees use social media, both personally and professionally. Relevant case law and arbitrations involving social media will be discussed.

CONCURRENT SESSION

De-escalation: Preventing and Interrupting Abuse and Violence at Work

In too many workplaces, tense situations escalate to violence. In others, harmful and inappropriate behaviors are overlooked, and employees' concerns are dismissed. This session presents communication and de-escalation strategies to interrupt these situations before they escalate. Participants will identify strategies for maintaining safety and wellbeing for themselves and others.

The Top 5 Things You Need to Know About Federal Sector Practice

The one area of practice which never seems to shrink is the federal sector. While many arbitrators shy away from the practice for a myriad of reasons, just as many are taking it on as a method of growing our practices. This session will focus on both the business/practical side (listing on the System for Award Management, the contracting process and making sure you get paid, challenges with the parties' relationships), as well as the substantive side (understanding the nuances of master agreements, special arbitrability issues, the scope of review of awards under the FLRA, issues with the Back Pay Act).
