

Amanda Rogers

Amanda is an arbitrator, mediator, and lawyer residing in Vancouver, British Columbia, specializing in workplace dispute resolution alongside her colleague Vince Ready.

She is on the collective agreement arbitration bureau list of arbitrators in BC, is named as an arbitrator in numerous collective agreements, and acts as an external adjudicator for the Canada Industrial Relations Board.

Amanda has a particular interest in mediating collective bargaining disputes. In addition to numerous consensual appointments as a mediator in this context, Amanda has been appointed as a special mediator by the Governments of SK and BC and as a special officer in BC to address collective bargaining issues. Amanda has also undertaken studies of collective bargaining structures and legislation, having been appointed as an Industrial Inquiry Commissioner by the Government of BC in respect of successorship rights in the forestry industry, and currently serving as a Member of a Commission of Inquiry established by the Government of Canada to study the underlying issues in longshoring disputes on Canada's West Coast.

Amanda graduated from the University of Toronto with an honours B.A (2003) and a Juris Doctor (JD) (2007). She completed a Master of Laws (LLM) specializing in Dispute Resolution at Osgoode Hall Law School, York University in 2021.
