

Dmitri Iglitzin is a partner in the firm of Barnard Iglitzin & Lavitt, LLP. He received his B.A. from Yale University, 1983, magna cum laude, and his J.D. from the University of Michigan School of Law, 1986, magna cum laude. Mr. Iglitzin clerked for Chief Judge Barbara Rothstein, United States District Court, Western District of Washington, prior to working as a public defender in Seattle for seven years. He is also a former assistant professor of law at the University of Washington School of Law and taught labor law there as an adjunct professor of law.

Mr. Iglitzin's practice is centered on campaign finance, nonprofit, and election law, as well as representing both public and private-sector unions, including both international unions, such as the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, the Service Employees International Union, and the Inlandboatmen's Union of the Pacific, and many local unions, such as the Washington and Oregon State Nurses Associations and locals affiliated with The NewsGuild - CWA, the International Longshore & Warehouse Union, the International Alliance of Theatrical State Employees, and the American Federation of Teachers. He is currently outside general counsel for the Inlandboatmen's Union of the Pacific, Teamsters Local 174, the American Federation of Teachers - Washington, and the Washington State Labor Council.

Among Mr. Iglitzin's most notable legal accomplishments is the case of Wingert v. Yellow Freight Systems, Inc., which resulted in a decision by the Washington State Supreme Court holding that all employees in Washington State have a legally enforceable right to a paid 10-minute rest period after every three consecutive hours of work. Mr. Iglitzin also represented the SeaTac Committee for Good Jobs in the litigation surrounding SeaTac's groundbreaking $15-an-hour living wage ordinance, enacted by initiative in 2013, and was instrumental in the development of Seattle's law giving collective bargaining rights to independent contractor for-hire drivers. He has been named a "Washington State Super Lawyer" by Washington Law & Politics Magazine every year since 2007. He was also honored in 2010 as Washington State Jobs With Justice's "Movement Lawyer."